light from a welding torch? How to determine the intensity of the light (and in turn the intensity of the heat) generated by a welder? As far as I know, the spectra of different light sources are known to us. However, the spectra of light generated by welding is not known to me, and that makes me think that what I am asking is extremely vague. My question is kind of a general one, and I would like to know what is the color of the light generated by welding and what determines its color. I guess that heat determines the color, so the color of the light may depend on the power used by the welder. I assume that in the heat range used by welder (e.g. 15000-30000 degrees Celsius), there is some correlation between the intensity of the light and the temperature. The most similar question I could find here, although it is not about welding, is Does the intensity of a light source also depend on the color of the light. However, I think the answers there are not that helpful to my question. A: I think the best
